TAKING HEALTHCARE ADVICE FROM AMAZON & ZAPPOS

And Creating a Great Digital Experience at Your Healthcare Organization

SHOULD HEALTHCARE ORGANIZATIONS TAKE ADVICE FROM POPULAR RETAILERS? WE THINK SO.

Amazon and Zappos are two retail companies that have big insights to offer today's healthcare practices and providers when it comes to offering a great digital experience for consumers. Here's why:

amazon

Amazon gives its online users a chance to personalize their journey by offering intuitive navigation, well-organized products, easy one-click actions and useful reminders and communications to create an engaging experience that never leaves consumers in the dark about how to find what they need.

Zappos

Acquired by Amazon in 2009, Zappos creates an exceptional online user experience with its strong focus on customer service through live chat, phone and email support clearly showcased on their website, convenient product ordering and return policies and ten core values that guide its internal culture and external digital goals.

Because both are online companies, the digital needs of Amazon and Zappos consumers make up an essential part of their business models. In the healthcare industry, where digital takes a back seat, many organizations fail to consider their online appearance and the digital tools available to enhance service delivery—focus areas that need improvement if modern healthcare companies expect to survive through great industry change.

MAKE DIGITAL A PART OF YOUR CONSUMER EXPERIENCE

Start out by mapping the consumer experience you offer, listing all possible touchpoints along the journey before, during and after any encounter consumers have with your organization. Whether they receive short-term or long-term services, consumers will come into contact with several digital touchpoints—both online and off—that might need some work in order to continuously improve their experience with your team and brand.
